

From: ViaE [e-mail address redacted]
Sent: Saturday, September 17, 2011 11:04 AM
To: ai_implementation
Subject: your requested info

To whom it may concern

The patent process is at best scary, prior art can be used and twisted by examiners with 20/20 Monday quarter back foresight but out in the field such is not the case, but even with that said its the infringement that takes place after you have put on the market, if you are a small operation, foreign companies have no respect for our patents and are supported by large retail outlets, the little guy with his or her dream is caught in money sucking litigation that can seemly go on for years,

My suggestion is since the uspto issues the rights of a patent they also should enforce those said rights, say via a product tax on all foreign made products entering the usa and or patent infringement insurance.