

From: Rob S

Sent: Saturday, June 18, 2011 3:55 AM

To: reexamimprovementcomments

Subject: crowd-source the examination process to the public

When someone submits a patent, it should be made available on the internet for public review. If someone demonstrates prior art, or gives a good reason why the patent (or a portion of the patent) is too obvious to be patented, then the patent should be rejected. Similarly, people should be able to file requests that will allow the public to re-examine the validity of existing patents.