General Comment

In what way is the basic right of judicial review met if Inter Partes Review weakened or demolished?

Citizens should be able to support and defend their ideas and conflicts with other ideas to every extent.

The call to weaken the process of review seems to come down to government not wanting to handle current issues or their legal costs, no matter what the scale.

If current issues are never addressed or defended, than no government accountability for their people is met.

Also, this possible decision is moving us away from establishing a necessary small claims court for patents in the U.S.
