

Entities which pay money for digital items such as books or music should have all the same rights of first sale as entities which pay money for physical items such as books or music. No "agreement," be it named license, lease, or rental, should be able to restrict such rights. Such "agreements" are between two parties with unequal power.

Libraries must have the ability to loan materials for which the library has paid money, be the materials physical or digital, without paying any amount of money per circulation.

Zeke Crater