

All copyright rights belong to registered author or person or business to whom the author has transferred those rights and such person or business should be required to prove this transfer if requested by author or their legal heir or representative. Any attempt by another person or business to reregister a work in their own name should result in stiff fines if they cannot prove legal transfer from author.

There should be positively NO infringements on those rights by any entity. The reselling of pirated copies or copying of works held by libraries should be absolutely forbidden. A program should be inserted to prevent more than one copy being made of any ebook, including those bought or gifted or sent out for review or promotion. No bookseller should be allowed to give away copies of any ebook for promotion of their business without reimbursement to publisher or author.

My comments are as an author who is lucky enough to be published by an honest and outstanding online publisher, but I see the potential for such abuse should I suddenly be forced to find other means of getting my work published. It is the Government's job to serve ALL of its citizens, not just those with money and influence.

Mary Emmons