

Professor Victoria F. Phillips

Director

Glushko-Samuelsan Intellectual Property Law Clinic at American University Washington College of Law

Professor Phillips teaches communications and intellectual property law and serves as the Director of the Glushko-Samuelsan Intellectual Property Law Clinic at American University Washington College of Law (WCL). She helped found the clinic and the law school's Program on Information Justice and Intellectual Property in 2001 to introduce students to the public interest dimensions of intellectual property, communications and information law and policy. She serves as a faculty advisor to the Communications and Media Law Society and to the American University Journal of Gender and Social Policy.

In 2008, she was as a Visiting Associate Professor of Law at Georgetown University Law Center and served as Acting Director of the Institute of Public Representation's First Amendment and Media Law Clinic. She also serves on the Board of Directors of the Washington Area Lawyers for the Arts and is Co-Chair of the Transactional Committee of the American Association of Law School's Clinical Section. Her scholarship and advocacy explores the dynamic changes taking place in these fields and the challenging public interest issues raised by these developments.

Prior to joining the WCL faculty, she was Chief of the Legal Branch of the Mass Media Bureau of the Federal Communications Commission and counsel in the Office of General Counsel where she worked on a wide range of communications policy proceedings. She also served as the Assistant General Counsel of the National Endowment for the Humanities, practiced communications and intellectual property law at Wiley, Rein and Fielding in Washington D.C. and clerked for The Hon. Edward S. Northrop, U.S. District Judge in Baltimore, Maryland.
