Good effort on improving the USPTO process and helping inventors maintain ownership of their inventions, however you need to go back and review some of the outstanding cases and apply the new standards retroactively. By not doing this you are allowing those who have abused the system in the past to "get away with stolen goods"...

Going to a new uniform standard is good going forward, but does not apply to older cases....those people are basically rooked and entities have swiped inventions, i.e. they are like the shop lifters who walked away with valuable patents...
