Since the inception of the civilization, those involved in developing countless layers of innovations in achieving what we have now for everybody's benefit, needed an increased hope in protecting their inspired creating efforts.

The main question is, are we able to continue to maintain and refine that hope, or divert those brilliant innovators of our time on the path of resentful abandonment of their great ideas to come to life?

It's an odd feeling of discouragement for me as a small inventor, in letting my new ideas be brought to life in this environment already chocked with too much bureaucracy.

This is why I support the 2019 Revised Patent Subject Matter Eligibility Guidance.

Thank you for yours effort to position the United States to retake the lead in the next wave of technological innovation in areas like quantum computing, artificial intelligence, and medical diagnostics. Protection for the discoveries in these fields is the absolute best way to promote progress of the science and useful arts in our modern day.

With hope and due respect,
