Subject: University of California Case

Please comment on the new University of Florida case. The claim includes: receiving physiologic treatment data from at least two bedside machines; converting said physiologic treatment data from a machine specific format into a machine independent format within a computing device remotely located from said bedside machines; performing at least one programmatic action involving said machine-independent data; and presenting results from said programmatic actions upon a bedside graphical user interface. The Court found this ineligible. In particular, please explain why differs from Example 42.

Or just focusing on Example 42 itself, what specifically was the technological improvement?

Thank you.
