

Submitter Information

Name: C. Perry

General Comment

While I understand that any part of the declaration or statement filed has to contain an acknowledgement that willfully false statements made therein is punishable by fine or imprisonment, keeping the "without any deceptive intention" in the statute may be a good idea. There may be semantic differences between "false statement" and "deceptive intention" that retaining the language may help clarify.