American Trademark Law

The Trademark Act of 1946 establishes a system for registering marks that are used in commerce in the United States. The act provides for the registration of marks that are likely to cause confusion, mistake, or deception as to the source, affiliation or affiliation of goods or services. The act also provides for the registration of marks that are likely to be confusingly similar to already registered marks.

The registration process begins with the filing of an application for registration of a mark. The application must include a description of the mark and the goods or services to which it is used. The application must also include a declaration of the owner's use of the mark and an indication of the goods or services to which it is used.

The Trademark Office will conduct a search of its records to determine if the mark is likely to cause confusion, mistake, or deception as to the source, affiliation or affiliation of goods or services. If the Trademark Office finds that the mark is likely to cause confusion, mistake, or deception, it will issue an interference proceeding. In an interference proceeding, the owners of the already registered marks must prove that they are entitled to the registration of the new mark.

If the Trademark Office finds that the mark is not likely to cause confusion, mistake, or deception, it will issue a registration. The registration will be valid for ten years and can be renewed for additional ten-year periods.

The registration of a mark gives the owner exclusive use of the mark in commerce in the United States. The owner can enjoin the use of the mark by others who are likely to cause confusion, mistake, or deception as to the source, affiliation, or affiliation of goods or services.

MARK INFORMATION
Standard Character Claim  No  Mark Drawing Type  2 - AN ILLUSTRATION DRAWING WITHOUT ANY WORDS(S)/LETTER(S)
Description of the Mark  The mark consists of a stylized skull with a crown tilted on the upper right side of the skull. The skull consists of a curved line design at the top of the skull, two large eye sockets with each socket featuring three "wings" protruding outside of each socket, and the border of the sockets featuring a repeating curved design. Each socket is topped by five circles that represent eyebrows. Under each eye socket is a stylized curved line design that points down to the nose. Each of these curved designs has three circles underneath. The nose is in the shape of an upward pointing arrow. The bottom of the skull contains a teeth and chin design. The crown has five points with heart shapes at the top. The body of each point contains an upside down heart design. The main body of the crown contains a line drawing of a heart with the line extending away from the heart to both the left and the right.
